All building contractors and construction workers are at risk of substantial fines if the EPA finds them conducting work on lead-painted surfaces without the proper RRP training certification. Lead dust hazards threaten the development of young children, and contaminants can last on a work site for many years if that site is not properly cleaned and cleared at the conclusion of the construction or renovation work.

Who should attend? General contractors, window and door installers, roofers, HVAC workers, gutter installers, and anyone who might disturb existing paint in the course of their work on older homes.
